What to do while you're not complaining

I don't mean formal complaints to the manager; I just mean the low-level grumbling that many of us do. Sometimes to ourselves; sometimes to each other. There's a certain degree of healthy venting, and of course, it's powerful to make our needs known. But many of us have felt how constant complaining (whether our own or another's) can erode our joy. Going along with our theme of gratitude this month, we'll explore what we might do instead of complaining. –Rev. Fa Jun

We hold Children's Religious Exploration (CRE) classes at the same time.

The Gratitude That Saves

Gratitude is one of the most powerful capacities human beings possess. Study after study shows how effective gratitude can be at saving our health, happiness, and relationships. With a powerful enough practice of gratitude, we can even ripple out blessings to the world around us. This morning find out how to cultivate it. –Rev. Fa Jun, Minister
